Dear Reader,

What if you were never meant to follow just one path? Perhaps you are a banker with an entrepreneurial dream, a creative with a passion for leadership, or a young graduate exploring opportunities beyond your qualifications. Your potential may be far greater than one professional title.

For generations, success has been associated with establishing oneself in a single career. Yet across Africa, a different story is emerging. People are crossing professional boundaries, embracing diverse interests and discovering new ways to turn their talents into opportunities.

Welcome to THE POWER OF MULTIPOTENTIAL, an edition celebrating individuals who are building, creating and making a difference across different fields. From entrepreneurship and technology to fashion, leadership and innovation, we explore the possibilities that emerge when people dare to grow beyond conventional expectations.

Across the continent, young Africans are rewriting the rules. Graduates are becoming entrepreneurs, professionals are pursuing creative ventures, and innovators are combining different skills to solve real-world problems. Their journeys demonstrate that having multiple interests can be an advantage when guided by discipline, focus and purpose.

Of course, exploring different passions comes with challenges. Society often expects us to specialise, but being multipotential does not mean doing everything at once. It means recognising your abilities, developing them intentionally and finding meaningful ways to bring them together.

As Africa navigates an evolving economy and changing world of work, adaptability, creativity and continuous learning are becoming essential. Our generation must not only prepare for opportunities but also learn to create them. In this edition, we celebrate Africans who have challenged conventional career paths and embraced different dimensions of their potential. Their stories remind us that growth is not always linear and that we are never too accomplished to explore a new chapter.

As you turn these pages, remember that you do not have to shrink your ambitions to fit one definition of success. Explore your interests, develop your talents and remain open to new possibilities. You are more than one title, more than one talent and certainly more than one possibility. Give yourself permission to become. Dare to explore. Dare to create. Dare to become.

Warm regards,

THE POWER OF MULTIPOTENTIAL

WHY AFRICA'S YOUTH DON'T HAVE TO PICK JUST ONE LANE

For generations, young Africans have grown up with a familiar message: choose a profession, master it and build your life around it. Be a doctor, engineer, lawyer or accountant. Anything outside that chosen path is often considered a distraction. If you are passionate about technology and music, business and fashion, or agriculture and creative arts, you may be told to focus and choose one. But the world is changing, and so are the opportunities available to young people. Increasingly, success is no longer defined by one qualification, profession or area of expertise. Across Africa, a growing number of young people are discovering the value of being multipotential: having diverse interests, developing different abilities and finding meaningful ways to combine them.

THE MYTH OF ONE CALLING

The belief that everyone must follow one career path does not always reflect the realities of modern life. Africa's economic and social challenges are complex, requiring people who can think across disciplines and approach problems from different perspectives. Consider a software developer who understands agriculture and creates digital solutions for smallholder farmers. Or a filmmaker with an understanding of economics who uses storytelling to communicate business opportunities. Their advantage is not simply what they know individually, but how they connect different areas of knowledge. Some of the most interesting opportunities emerge where disciplines meet. This makes curiosity, creativity and the willingness to explore unfamiliar fields increasingly valuable.

THREE ADVANTAGES OF BEING MULTIPOTENTIAL

1. The ability to connect ideas

Innovation often happens when seemingly unrelated ideas come together. Across cities such as Lagos, Nairobi, Kigali, Accra and Johannesburg, young Africans are finding creative ways to combine technology, culture, fashion, entertainment and business. What may appear to be unrelated interests could become the foundation of a new product, service or enterprise. Your hobbies and passions may hold opportunities you have not yet recognised.

2. Adaptability and continuous learning

Multipotential individuals are often comfortable being beginners. They understand that learning does not end with a degree or professional qualification. Whether acquiring digital skills, exploring entrepreneurship or developing creative abilities, their willingness to learn helps them respond to changing circumstances. In an economy where industries are evolving and traditional career opportunities remain competitive, adaptability can be a significant advantage.

3. The ability to bridge different worlds

Having experience across different fields allows individuals to communicate ideas to diverse audiences. Someone who understands technology, business and community development, for example, can connect innovation with practical social needs. This ability to translate knowledge across disciplines can contribute to stronger collaboration, better solutions and new opportunities.

NAVIGATING THE CHALLENGE

Having multiple interests does not automatically guarantee success. Without discipline and direction, curiosity can become a cycle of unfinished projects and scattered ambitions. The goal is not to pursue everything simultaneously, but to manage your potential intentionally. Start by working in seasons. Give yourself time to concentrate on one priority before moving to another. Build a combination of complementary skills rather than trying to master everything. Most importantly, identify the common purpose connecting your interests. Your different passions may all reflect one deeper desire: creating, solving problems, communicating or making a difference.

AFRICA NEEDS YOUR FULL POTENTIAL

Africa's development will require more than people who follow established career paths. It needs innovators, entrepreneurs, professionals, creatives and problem-solvers who are willing to explore new possibilities and combine their abilities to address the continent's challenges. Young Africans should not feel pressured to abandon their other interests simply to fit into conventional definitions of success. A professional qualification can open one door, while creativity, entrepreneurship and continuous learning can open others. Your interests are not necessarily competing ambitions. With the right focus, they can become complementary strengths. The challenge is to discover what you are good at, develop it with intention and use it to create value.

Stop apologising for being interested in more than one thing. You do not have to fit into a single lane to make a meaningful contribution. Your greatest strength may lie in the unique combination of everything you bring to the table.

"NEVER ALLOW SOCIETY'S DEFINITION OF SUCCESS TO LIMIT THE MANY POSSIBILITIES WITHIN YOU."

THE PSYCHOLOGY OF MULTIPOTENTIALITY

Have you ever wondered why you are interested in several careers, enjoy learning different skills or constantly find yourself exploring new opportunities? Perhaps you are passionate about technology, but equally drawn to music, business, fashion or community development. You may not lack direction; you may simply have more than one area of interest worth exploring. Multipotentiality describes people with diverse interests, abilities and ambitions that extend across different fields. Although it is not a psychological diagnosis, research into personality, creativity and career development helps explain why some individuals are naturally drawn to exploration and variety.

THE CURIOSITY FACTOR

Psychology recognises openness to experience as a personality trait associated with curiosity, imagination and willingness to explore new ideas. For multipotential individuals, learning something unfamiliar can be particularly rewarding. A young African who explores coding, photography and entrepreneurship, for example, may discover opportunities by combining these interests rather than treating them as competing ambitions.

THE POWER OF CONNECTING IDEAS

Creative thinking involves looking beyond familiar solutions. This is where divergent thinking becomes valuable: the ability to generate different ideas and approaches to a problem. A young person who understands agriculture and digital technology could develop solutions for farmers, while someone combining fashion and business could build a distinctive African clothing brand.

WHEN SOCIETY CREATES PRESSURE

Having multiple interests can also create uncertainty. Young people are frequently expected to identify one career, obtain qualifications and establish a clear professional identity. This can make exploring different paths feel like a lack of commitment. However, psychologist Mark Savickas' career adaptability framework identifies four important resources: concern, control, curiosity and confidence. These help individuals prepare for change, take responsibility, explore opportunities and overcome challenges.

TURNING POTENTIAL INTO PURPOSE

Multipotentiality requires more than curiosity. It needs discipline, prioritisation and the willingness to develop skills to a meaningful level. You do not have to pursue every passion simultaneously; you need to understand how your abilities can complement one another. As Africa's economies evolve, young people need the confidence to learn, adapt and create opportunities beyond traditional career boundaries. Your greatest strength may not be choosing one box, but discovering what you can build beyond it.

GOITSEMANG NAOMI MANTSWE: A JOURNEY OF PURPOSE, REINVENTION AND IMPACT

There are seasons in life when success is not about reaching a destination, but about having the courage to discover what comes next. For Goitsemang Naomi Mantswe, a seasoned banking professional, entrepreneur, fashion influencer and motivational speaker, her journey is a powerful example of what can happen when a woman refuses to be confined to a single definition of success. With almost 20 years of experience in banking, Mantswe has built a strong professional career while simultaneously pursuing her interests in entrepreneurship, fashion, creativity, hospitality and personal development. Her story is one of reinvention, demonstrating that professional success and personal creativity can exist side by side.

FROM BANKING TO ENTREPRENEURSHIP

Mantswe's professional journey in banking has given her extensive exposure to business, leadership, people and the corporate environment. Yet, rather than allowing her career to define the boundaries of her ambition, she continued exploring other areas where her creativity and entrepreneurial instincts could flourish. That journey led to the creation of Majonos, a boutique focused on dressing executives in professionally tailored formal wear while also creating beautifully crafted traditional attire. Through the brand, Mantswe brings together professionalism, personal style and African identity, creating clothing designed to help people feel confident, elegant and authentically themselves.

Majonos represents more than fashion for Mantswe. It reflects her understanding that the way people present themselves can influence how they feel, how they carry themselves and how confidently they step into different spaces.

BUILDING BEYOND ONE BUSINESS

Her entrepreneurial vision extends beyond fashion into hospitality through Permanent Inn, a bed-and-breakfast business with locations in Block 7 and Block 3 in Gaborone. Through Permanent Inn, Mantswe has entered an entirely different sector, creating spaces focused on comfortable accommodation and welcoming guest experiences. Her move into hospitality demonstrates the breadth of her entrepreneurial interests and her willingness to explore opportunities beyond her established corporate career. The combination of banking, fashion and hospitality reveals a woman who is not afraid to learn, adapt and build across different industries.

CREATIVITY THAT FOUND RECOGNITION

Mantswe's influence in the fashion and creative space has also received recognition. In 2025, she was voted Most Creative Entrepreneur within the Christian community, acknowledging her entrepreneurial spirit and creativity. In 2026, she was voted a Fashion Influencer in the Christian community by African women, further recognising her presence and influence within the fashion space. For Mantswe, however, recognition is not the destination. It is simply part of a much larger journey. Her achievements demonstrate that creativity can coexist with professional excellence, and that women do not have to choose between building a career and pursuing the passions that make them feel fulfilled.

EMPOWERING WOMEN THROUGH HER STORY

Perhaps one of the most meaningful dimensions of Mantswe's journey is her commitment to encouraging and empowering other women. As a motivational speaker, she shares her experiences, lessons and personal journey to encourage women to believe in themselves, embrace their individuality and recognise that their circumstances do not have to define the limits of their future. Her message resonates particularly with women navigating multiple identities and responsibilities; professionals, mothers, entrepreneurs, wives, leaders and creatives who may sometimes feel that they have lost sight of their own dreams. Mantswe's message is clear: women should not be afraid to evolve. Her own life reflects that belief. After more than 15 years in banking, she continued to explore entrepreneurship, fashion, creativity and hospitality. Rather than viewing these pursuits as disconnected paths, she sees them as different expressions of the same underlying purpose: growth, impact and creating value.

THE COURAGE TO REINVENT

Reinvention requires courage because it often means stepping into unfamiliar territory while carrying the lessons of previous chapters. Mantswe's journey shows that starting something new does not mean abandoning what came before. Instead, previous experiences can become the foundation for the next chapter. Her banking career provided professional discipline and business exposure. Entrepreneurship gave her room to create. Fashion allowed her to express identity and confidence. Hospitality opened another avenue for enterprise, while motivational speaking gave her a platform to share what she has learned with others. Together, these experiences have shaped a journey that is broader than any single title.

HER VISION

Mantswe's vision extends beyond building successful businesses. She wants to create a legacy that encourages women to step confidently into their purpose and recognise that they can be both professionally accomplished and creatively fulfilled. She aspires to continue growing Majonos and Permanent Inn while expanding her influence as a motivational speaker, fashion influencer and creative entrepreneur. More importantly, she wants her journey to become a source of encouragement for women who may be questioning whether they are capable of pursuing their own dreams. Her message is especially powerful because it comes from experience. She is not simply telling women that reinvention is possible; she is demonstrating it through the different chapters of her own life.

A STORY STILL BEING WRITTEN

Goitsemang Naomi Mantswe's story carries a simple but powerful message: you do not have to remain in one chapter simply because you have been successful in it. You are allowed to evolve, reinvent yourself and pursue the dreams that continue to call you. From banking to entrepreneurship, from fashion to hospitality, and from personal achievement to empowering other women, Mantswe continues to build a journey defined not by one title, but by purpose. Her story is still being written. And if the chapters so far are any indication, the next ones will be shaped by the same qualities that have defined her journey: courage, creativity, ambition and an unwavering belief that growth is always possible. For Mantswe, success is not simply about what she builds for herself. It is also about the confidence she inspires in others to build something of their own. Because sometimes reinvention is not starting over. It is finally giving yourself permission to become everything you were meant to be.

THE LEGACY FRAMES

FROM THE WORLD TO GABON: TURNING INTERNATIONAL EXPOSURE INTO NATIONAL CONTRIBUTION

Some journeys take us beyond familiar borders, not to disconnect us from home, but to prepare us to contribute differently when we return. Perrine Nkene Mba's story reflects this journey of learning, growth and purposeful contribution.

Born and educated in Libreville, Perrine began her academic journey at Lycée Technique Omar Bongo, where she obtained a Baccalaureate in Accounting and Management in 2002. Her ambition took her to South Africa, where she pursued higher education and earned a Master's degree in Project Management, graduating Cum Laude from Cape Peninsula University of Technology.

Her professional journey crossed several industries and countries. She gained experience at iThemba LABS in South Africa, returned to Gabon in 2010 to work in the oil sector in Port-Gentil, and later explored opportunities in hospitality in Dubai before continuing her career in France. These experiences exposed her to different cultures, professional systems and ways of approaching challenges.

On 30 August 2023, Perrine made a defining decision: to return to Gabon. However, this was more than a geographical homecoming. It represented an opportunity to bring international knowledge, professional experience and broader perspectives into the service of her country.

Since returning, she has pursued interests in entrepreneurship, social action, civic engagement and politics. Her commitment includes supporting young mothers and children, promoting dignity and restoring hope among vulnerable communities. She also hopes to develop platforms for mentorship, solidarity and knowledge-sharing.

Perrine's journey carries an important message for Africa's diaspora: international exposure becomes even more valuable when it creates opportunities for others. Returning home is not simply about where one lives; it is about what one is willing to contribute.

Her story reminds us that the world can be a classroom, but purpose gives the lessons meaning. Sometimes, the journey away from home prepares us to make a greater difference when we return.

WHERE AFRICA'S NEXT GENERATION CAN BUILD, INNOVATE AND EARN

Africa's changing economic landscape is creating opportunities for young people to turn diverse talents into meaningful ventures. As industries evolve and new markets emerge, the ability to combine skills across different disciplines is becoming increasingly valuable. From agriculture and technology to finance, creative industries and renewable energy, some of the continent's most promising opportunities lie where different areas of expertise meet.

WHERE DIFFERENT SKILLS MEET OPPORTUNITY

In agriculture, combining farming knowledge, digital technology and logistics can create solutions that connect smallholder farmers to markets, improve distribution and reduce food waste. In the creative industry, blending storytelling, digital marketing and financial knowledge can transform content creation into sustainable businesses. Similar opportunities exist in renewable energy, healthcare, tourism and education. The combination of technical expertise and community knowledge, for example, can help expand clean energy access and improve essential services. The message is simple: Africa needs people who can connect ideas and turn them into practical solutions.

FIVE PATHS WORTH EXPLORING

Young multipotential Africans can explore several emerging opportunities:

- AgriTech: Combining agriculture, technology and logistics to improve food systems.
- Creative entrepreneurship: Turning fashion, entertainment, storytelling and digital media into viable businesses.
- Clean energy: Connecting engineering, business and community knowledge to expand sustainable energy access.
- Digital services: Combining technical skills, communication and project management to serve local and international clients.
- Business development: Using research, marketing and networking to connect businesses, investors and markets across Africa.

FROM TALENT TO INCOME

Diverse skills create value when they address real problems. Start with one marketable skill that can generate income, develop complementary abilities, identify a market need and test your idea on a manageable scale. Think beyond your immediate environment. Regional trade initiatives such as the African Continental Free Trade Area (AfCFTA) offer opportunities to explore markets beyond national borders.

Africa's next generation must learn not only to seek employment but also to create value, build enterprises and solve problems. Your different talents are not competing ambitions. When combined with purpose, they can become the foundation of your next big opportunity.

THIS WEEK'S BOOK: RANGE
WHY GENERALISTS TRIUMPH IN A SPECIALIZED WORLD
David Epstein
What if having diverse interests and experiences is an advantage rather than a distraction? In Range, David Epstein challenges the belief that success requires early specialisation. He explores how broad experiences, curiosity and developing different skills can help people discover opportunities, solve complex problems and achieve extraordinary things.
The book encourages readers to embrace exploration, remain open to new possibilities and recognise that skills gained in different fields can work together to create unique strengths.

THE LESSON:
You do not have to follow one path to achieve greatness. Your diverse interests and experiences can become your greatest advantage.
YOUR NEXT MOVE:
Identify two interests or skills you have developed in different areas. Explore how you can combine them to solve a problem, create an opportunity or develop something valuable.
Don't limit your future to what you already know. Explore, connect and grow.
YOUR DIFFERENT TALENTS CAN CREATE AN EXTRAORDINARY FUTURE!

NEW CHALLENGE: 7 DAYS TO TURN YOUR IDEAS INTO ACTION
Stop waiting for the perfect moment. For the next seven days, challenge yourself to move one idea closer to reality. Identify an opportunity, set a clear goal, take action, seek feedback and make progress.
YOUR MISSION: Take one practical step every day towards bringing an idea to life. Ask yourself: "What can I start today with what I already have?"

DID YOU KNOW?
Big achievements often begin with small, consistent actions. You do not need to have everything figured out before you begin. Progress starts when preparation meets action.
Stop postponing. Start building. Make it happen!

THIS WEEK'S TOOL: NOTION
Organise. Plan. Achieve.
Notion is an all-in-one productivity tool for creating notes, managing projects, planning tasks and organising information in one workspace.

WHY IT MATTERS:
Success requires more than ideas; it requires organisation and consistency. Notion helps students, entrepreneurs and professionals manage their time, track goals and turn plans into action. Stay organised. Work smarter. Achieve more.

BUILDING BEYOND ONE IDENTITY

HOW COLOMBE TEBILY IS CONNECTING FINANCE, FASHION, CULTURE AND SOCIAL IMPACT.

In a world that often encourages people to choose one profession and remain within its boundaries, Colombe Tebily represents a different approach to success. Her journey demonstrates how diverse interests, professional expertise and entrepreneurial ambition can come together to create opportunities across different industries.

Professionally established in France, Tebily has built experience in wealth management within the financial and banking sector. Yet her ambitions extend beyond finance. Driven by creativity and an interest in fashion, she pursued specialised training in the industry, developing another dimension of her professional identity through styling and artistic direction.

Her entrepreneurial journey has brought these different interests together. Through ColombeTebily Consulting, she works in strategic communication, public relations, personal branding and corporate image development. She also founded AZIGBOO LOKUI, a textile brand celebrating Ivorian traditional fabrics and craftsmanship, bringing African cultural heritage into contemporary fashion.

Her vision extends beyond individual businesses. Through MIA (Make Up in Abidjan), she has created a platform connecting professionals and businesses within the beauty and cosmetics industry. Her social initiatives, including Le Graya Populaire, I-SOLA and Coco Ma Marraine, demonstrate another dimension of her work: using influence and networks to support vulnerable communities, particularly children.

These different ventures reveal an important lesson about multipotentiality. One's professional background does not have to become a boundary. Skills acquired in one industry can create opportunities in another, while creativity and experience can become powerful tools for entrepreneurship and social development.

For young Africans, Tebily's journey offers an invitation to think beyond conventional career paths. Explore your interests, develop your abilities and recognise how different talents can complement one another. Success is not simply about accumulating professional titles; it is also about building platforms, creating opportunities and contributing to society.

Her expanding involvement in public life, including her parliamentary candidacy in Gagnoa, Côte d'Ivoire, represents another chapter in a journey connecting enterprise with community development.

Colombe Tebily's story reminds us that we do not have to be defined by one identity. Sometimes, our greatest contribution emerges when we bring everything we have learned, experienced and created into one bigger vision.

HOW ARTIFICIAL INTELLIGENCE IS HELPING AFRICAN YOUTH TURN MULTIPLE TALENTS INTO OPPORTUNITIES

Artificial intelligence is changing how people work, create businesses and develop new skills. For young Africans with diverse interests, this shift presents an exciting opportunity: the ability to turn multiple talents into practical solutions without necessarily having a large team, expensive equipment or extensive technical expertise. In the past, a young entrepreneur might have had an excellent business idea but lacked the skills to design a brand, conduct market research, develop a website or analyse finances. Today, accessible AI tools can help bridge some of these gaps, allowing individuals to move from ideas to implementation more quickly.

FROM MULTIPLE TALENTS TO MULTIPLE OPPORTUNITIES

A young person interested in writing, marketing and technology can use AI to develop content, research markets and build a digital presence. Someone passionate about agriculture and business can explore digital solutions for farmers, analyse market opportunities and develop business proposals. AI also makes learning more accessible. Young people can use it to understand unfamiliar subjects, practise new skills, develop project plans and explore industries beyond their academic backgrounds. This creates opportunities for those willing to remain curious and adaptable.

AI IS A TOOL, NOT A SUBSTITUTE FOR THINKING

While AI can accelerate productivity, it cannot replace sound judgement, creativity, human relationships and an understanding of local realities. African markets have unique languages, cultures, consumer behaviours and economic challenges. Young innovators must ensure that the solutions they develop respond to genuine community needs. It is equally important to verify AI-generated information, protect personal data and avoid depending on technology without understanding the work being produced.

BUILDING THE NEXT GENERATION OF AFRICAN CREATORS

My advice to young Africans is simple: do not wait until you have mastered everything before starting. Identify a problem, use the skills you already possess and explore how AI can help you develop what is missing. Start small, experiment responsibly and improve as you learn. The future will reward people who combine technical knowledge with creativity, communication, adaptability and initiative.

AI does not have to limit your potential. It can help you put more of it to work. The opportunity is not simply to use artificial intelligence, but to develop the human intelligence, judgement and courage needed to turn ideas into impact.

WHY CONTINUOUS LEARNING IS ESSENTIAL FOR AFRICA'S NEXT GENERATION OF LEADERS

Dear Young African,

One of the greatest lessons my journey has taught me is that your circumstances may influence where you begin, but your willingness to learn can change where you end up. Growing up, I experienced rejection, bullying, body shaming and academic struggles. There were moments when I questioned my abilities and struggled with my sense of worth. However, I eventually discovered that my past did not have to determine my future. I made a deliberate decision to invest in myself, change my thinking and pursue knowledge that would help me grow. My journey into accounting and finance was only the beginning. Over the years, I continued pursuing professional qualifications, leadership development, coaching and personal growth. From becoming a Chartered Accountant and Fellow of ACCA and ZICA to advancing my knowledge in finance, risk management and leadership, every learning experience opened new perspectives and prepared me for greater responsibilities. Today, after more than two decades in the professional environment, I remain a student of life. My experience has taught me that learning is not an event; it is a lifelong commitment.

NEVER STOP DEVELOPING YOURSELF
Young people must understand that graduating from university is not the end of education. The world is changing, industries are evolving and new opportunities are emerging. You must remain curious, acquire relevant skills and be willing to learn beyond your chosen profession. Read books, seek mentors, attend training programmes, embrace technology and learn from people whose experiences differ from yours. Do not wait for your employer or circumstances to create opportunities for your development. Take responsibility for becoming better.

TURN KNOWLEDGE INTO IMPACT
I have come to appreciate that knowledge becomes more meaningful when it is used to improve lives. Beyond my corporate responsibilities, I have had the privilege of training over 2,000 professionals and empowering more than 400 women through the She Means Success platform. These experiences have reinforced my belief that personal growth should eventually translate into collective progress. What you learn should not only advance your career; it should also equip you to contribute to your community and develop others.

PREPARE BEFORE OPPORTUNITY KNOCKS
I often believe that before someone chooses you, you must become eligible to be chosen. Develop your capabilities before the opportunity arrives. And if there is no table available for you, have the courage to create one. Africa needs young people who are prepared, adaptable, solution-oriented and committed to lifelong learning. Your qualification may open a door, but your ability to keep learning, growing and applying knowledge will determine how effectively you walk through it.

Do not allow your past academic performance, background or present circumstances to define your potential. Invest in yourself, remain teachable and never become too accomplished to learn something new. Your greatest qualification may ultimately be your willingness to keep learning.
